AMABLE RELAXATION.

Senator Frederick S. Gibbs' Artistic Diversion From Public Affairs.

It is not a common habit among men engaged in the practical affairs of statecraft to find their greatest pleasure in collecting works of the fine arts, but it is a pleasant hobby, as it is illustrated by Senator Frederick S. Gibbs, a notice of whose collection of paintings was printed in THE SUN a year or two ago.

Senator Gibbs has recently acquired a notable group of some fifty-eight paintings by R. A. Blakelock, whose melancholy career was cut short a few years ago by his complete mental collapse just at a time when his weird and wonderful power as a colorist was beginning to win for his work more serious consideration from connoisseurs than his eccentricities had excited theretofore. No other such comprehensive collection of the works of this painter has been got together before, and this group of half a hundred paintings, covering pretty much the period of his whole career, is surprising in its revelation of the artist's range of expression and of his varying moods. From the most peaceful and poetic pastorals to the most weird and dramatic of sunsets and stormy moonlight scenes, the whole gamut of pictorial expression is run, and while the minor chord is that in which Blakelock most often expresses himself, there are other notes as clear and joyous as the songs of birds.

These who have known his works only by such view as has been vouchsafed the public of the sometimes enigmatic adventures into the realm of weird tonality, some of these same compositions will provide a happy surprise, and nothing in the collection is more interesting in a curious way than a large canvas of "The Boulder and the Flame" in the Franconia Notch, N. H., painted in 1878, in which the artist has set down with photographic minuteness the details of rock and ledge, footbridge and mountain stream. It is as unlike the later work of the painter's masterful palette, knife, as it is inferior to that same work as here shown in vigor and boldness and rich beauty of color.

This new acquisition of Senator Gibbs is interesting as illustrating the development of the taste of the art collector. A few years ago his private gallery was rich in figure paintings of the story-telling kind, the kind, in fact, that are commonly popular in black and white reproductions, and that might serve very well as a collection of the kind of "modern" newspaper illustrations of that sort of thing.

The journey lay in a few excellent examples of Inness, Wyant, Minor and Murphy among the Americans, not to mention the foreign landscape painters of whom there were some very good examples. Senator Gibbs appears now to have outgrown the purely pictorial and sentimental, and little by little has made room on his walls for such a collection as holds together without discord, and is, without, good to live with.

498 FULTON ST., Boná St. corner, BROOKLYN.

FOR THE MOTHER TO CHOOSE.

Is it better to let her son go to the Philippines or be Prosecuted for Perjury?

William George Hull ran away from his home in The Bronx on May 20 and enlisted as a soldier in the army. He swore that he was 21 years old. His mother, Mrs. Eleanor Baden, secured a writ of habeas corpus compelling the commandant at Willets Point to produce him in the United States District Court in Brooklyn yesterday. Mrs. Baden told Judge Thomas that the boy was only 19 years old and that he was her sole support, her other son being a cripple. She wanted William discharged from the army.

"I will grant your request," said Judge Thomas, "but in case I do this the District Attorney will take action against your boy for committing perjury. Is it not better that he should be a soldier of the United States than a felon?" "It is better that he should be imprisoned for perjury here than that he should die in the Philippines," said Mrs. Baden. Judge Thomas told her to consider well the matter before she came to a definite decision. She said she would do so, and the hearing was adjourned until to-morrow.

CHILD KILLED BY A TRAIN.

ABURY PARK, N. J., June 1.—Laughingly looking back and calling with a gay voice to his brother David to come on Edna Florence Morrow, the four-year-old daughter of Mayor George D. Morrow of Allentown, dashed down a deep embankment near the Allentown station at noon to-day and was killed by the Camden northbound train. Station Master Al Taber saw the train coming and called to the children to stop. The boy heard him and held back, but Florence rushed on, oblivious of danger and was struck by the engine.
